STRENGTHENING DEMOCRACY IN IDAHO

Philanthropy’s success depends on a thriving democracy. When democracy does not work for everyone, funders’ impacts shrink – no matter the issue area their organization focuses on. Any funder can work toward a more inclusive and accountable democracy.

How can philanthropy strengthen democracy in Idaho?

Philanthropy Northwest produces the Democracy Lens, a set of resources to demonstrate how democracy issues have impacted your state. The Democracy Lens includes case studies known as Bright Spots, which show how funders invest in democracy and where they can do more, and Democracy Charts, which highlight key statistics. In this resource, you will find the Democracy Charts for Idaho.

Philanthropy Northwest’s discussions with our members and our own research illuminate concerning trends affecting the health of democracy throughout our region, including:

- Democracy-related grants make up a small amount of funding in Idaho and from only a few funders, indicating room to grow in this space. We see this trend in other states in the region as well.

- Elected officials across the region are much less diverse than the populations they serve. In Idaho, people of color are almost eight times less likely than average to be in elected office. The disparity – which is larger than for any other Northwest state – may result in missing community perspectives and less accountability in public policy decisions.

- In recent decades, the number of Idahoan newspapers declined 21%, the largest decline in the region. A decline in local journalism in a highly rural state can make it harder for communities to stay informed and have their issues gain awareness.

- A large portion of eligible voters in the Northwest do not vote, including in Idaho, where turnout has grown but remains roughly the national average.

Public Participation in Democracy

Equity in Representation

Political candidacy is a way to ensure that democracy is reflective of the public good, but not all demographic groups are equally likely to run for office in Idaho. People of color are 19% of the population but only 2% of elected officials. The disparity may reflect missing community perspectives in political representation, which can limit the government’s accountability to address the full range of community needs. Funders can address this problem with policy advocacy for systems change, reducing economic barriers to run for office, supporting diverse leadership development and more.

Support for Local Journalism

In recent decades, the number of Idahoan newspapers declined 21%, highlighting a concerning decline in local journalism that provides crucial information to the rural state’s residents. Twelve papers closed down and several counties have no local papers at all. Philanthropies can collaborate with and fund diverse local news outlets so that all residents have access to quality news on events that impact them.

Voter Turnout and Election Effectiveness

Voting provides another snapshot of the public’s involvement in civil society. Idaho’s turnout has grown – peaking at 68% in 2020 – but remains around the national average, highlighting room for funders to foster more civic engagement so more Idahoans are included in the democratic process.

Limited voter turnout may also highlight a need for funders to advocate for improvements to the electoral system. The Massachusetts Institute of Technology scores elections performance based on election participation rates, voting accessibility measures and data accuracy protocols. Below is Idaho’s aggregate score on a percent scale (100% being the highest) and ranking (one being the highest out of 50 states plus Washington D.C.). The state has improved but often ranks toward the bottom, struggling with low voter registration, rejected military and overseas ballots, insufficient voter information tools, incomplete election data collection and more.
To see the real-world impact, check out the Idaho Bright Spots, which showcase examples of how funders have had success in improving democracy. The case studies cover efforts to support an accurate census count as well as a citizen-guided watershed council.
